This title, first published in 1979, is a glossary of the bawdy vocabulary that was used in Renaissance Drama. One of the Page 16/29 primary functions of this gloss of literary bawdy is to interpret imaginative uses of the language rather than simply record the generally accepted uses and meanings, with its principal task to make the dialogue of the plays more intelligible to the reader.

With examples of bawdy language used in the works of Shakespeare, Ben Jonson and John Webster amongst many others, this title will be of great interest to students of literature and performance studies.

John always wanted to see his fiance, Khloe, with another man. When he shares his fantasy with her, he's surprised by how readily she agrees to act his fantasy out. But as Khloe acquires a taste for black man, will things go too far? Can John accept a new Page 19/29 life as a cuckold? One thing's for sure: when Khloe gets a taste of black breeding, things will never be the same for her or John.

The English Novel, Volume I:1700 to Fielding collects a series of previously-published essays on the early eighteenth-century novel in a single volume, reflecting the proliferation of theoretical approaches since the 1970s. The novel has been the object of some of the most exciting and important critical speculations, and the eighteenthcentury novel has been at the centre of new approaches both to Page 23/29 the novel and to the period between 1700 and 1750. Richard Kroll's introduction seeks to frame the contributions by reference to the most significant critical discussions. These include: the question of whether and how we can talk about the 'rise' of the Page 24/29 novel; the vexed question of what might constitute a novel; the relationship between the novel and possibly competing genres such as history or the romance; the relationship between early male writers like Defoe and popular novels by women in the Page 25/29 early eighteenth century; the general ideological role played by novels relative to eighteenthcentury culture (are they means of ideological conscription or liberation?); poststructuralist analyses of identity and gender; and the emergence of Page 26/29 sentimental and domestic codes after Richardson, Since the modern European novel is often thought to have been formed in this period, these debates have clear implications for students of the novel in general as well as for those interested in the early enlightenment. Headnotes place each essay within the map of these wider concerns, and the volume offers a useful further reading list. Taken as a whole, this collection encapsulates the state of criticism at the present moment.
