Bananas, the most frequently consumed fresh fruit in the United States, have been linked to Miss Chiquita and Carmen Miranda, "banana republics," and Banana Republic clothing stores—everything from exotic kitsch, to Third World dictatorships, to middle-class fashion. But how did the rise in banana consumption in the United States affect the banana-growing regions of Central America? In this lively, interdisciplinary study, John Soluri integrates agroecology, anthropology, political economy, and history to trace the symbiotic growth of the export banana industry in Honduras and the consumer mass market in the United States. Beginning in the 1870s when bananas first appeared in the U.S. marketplace, Soluri examines the tensions between the small-scale growers, who dominated the trade in the early years, and the shippers. He then shows how rising demand led to changes in production that resulted in the formation of major agribusinesses, spawned international migrations, and transformed great swaths of the Honduran environment into monocultures susceptible to plant disease epidemics that in turn changed Central American livelihoods. Soluri also looks at labor practices and workers' lives, changing gender roles on the banana plantations, the effects of pesticides on the Honduran environment and people, and the mass marketing of bananas to consumers in the United States. His multifaceted account of a century of banana production and consumption adds an important chapter to the history of Honduras, as well as to the larger

This publication is the Food and Agriculture Organization's (FAO) annual review on food and agricultural commodities and trade for the year 1999-2000. The review is presented in two parts. The first part provides a synthesis of the key developments in agricultural commodity markets including the export earnings derived from agricultural commodities, import expenditures by developing countries for staple foods and commodity prices. It reviews factors influencing commodity markets, such as the global economic outlook and developments in international trade policy. The second part considers the current world market situation and short term outlook for 21 individual food and agricultural commodities or commodity groups. These considerations focus on current market developments.

The Agricultural Outlook 2021-2030 is a collaborative effort of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) and the Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO) of the United Nations. It brings together the commodity, policy and country expertise of both organisations as well as input from collaborating member countries to provide an annual assessment of the prospects for the coming decade of national, regional and global agricultural commodity markets. The publication consists of 11 Chapters; Chapter 1 covers agricultural and food markets; Chapter 2 provides regional outlooks and the remaining chapters are dedicated to individual commodities.

The Banana demystifies the banana trade and its path toward globalization. It reviews interregional relationships in the industry and the changing institutional framework governing global trade and assesses the roles of such major players as the European Union and the World Trade Organization. It also analyzes the forces driving today's economy, such as the competitiveness imperative, diversification processes, and niche market strategies. Its final chapter suggests how the outcome of the recent banana war will affect bananas and trade in other commodities sectors as well.

The Commodity Market Review 1997-98 is presented in two parts. Part I provides a synthesis of key developments in the global economy, commodity prices and export earnings as well as other developments affecting international trade in agriculture. It also summarizes selected recent FAO studies on commodities and trade as well as the activities of the FAO intergovernmental commodity groups. In this issue, two special features are reported: FAO's assessment of the possible consequences of the Asian financial turmoil on global agricultural commodity markets and agricultural trade prospects of the 70 African, Caribbean and Pacific countries that are parties to the Lome Convention. Part II reviews the current world market situation and short-term outlook for 21 individual commodities or commodity groups. These individual commodity reviews focus on market developments and summarize the more detailed commodity information and analysis available from FAO. Book jacket.
